Abstract

For paper: The purpose of this activity is to practice categorizing writing systems. The students are given the opportunity to categorize writing systems by color and make a drawing of the system.

The mapping system is the standard system of measurement in the sciences, including biology, chemistry, and physics. It has systematic advantages beyond all conversions, whether the system, mass (weight), or length, are in units of mass. This new metric system is provided for most biological systems (metric, μ g, mm, cm, and μ m) and is also available for other.

This mathematical system of measurement (in), commonly called the International System, has been adopted as the official system of measurement by the scientific community. Included in this system is a set of base units and derived units. The base units are the units of measurement for the seven basic quantities: length, mass, time, electric current, temperature, amount of substance, and luminous intensity. The derived units are the units of measurement for the other quantities, such as area, volume, speed, acceleration, force, energy, power, and so on. The International System is a coherent system of units, meaning that the units are related by powers of ten. This makes it easy to convert between units. The International System is the most widely used system of units in the world.

Starting with all length measurements, measurement error is not negligible (Table 1), and may be as high as 10% for the smallest fish. The error is not negligible for the largest fish, but is smaller (2–3%).
