

Engineering Ethics ENGR001 – Sample Final Exam Q&A

Question 1:

Why do we study engineering ethics?

Answer 1:

Engineers are responsible for the amazing innovations that advance societies and communities. Hence, it is no surprise that their work influences business practices and political statements. That is why it is that a general set of rules and regulations that focuses on honesty and safety has been established. This set of rules and regulations is referred to as the code of ethics. The code serves three important purposes. First, it introduces and familiarizes engineers to the highest standards of honesty and integrity expected of them. Furthermore, it encourages them to be honest, fair, and impartial while performing services, for their work influences greatly the public's health and safety. Lastly, it enhances not only their critical and independent thinking about moral issues (especially those of safety vs cost) but also their handling of conflicts of interests; hence, they develop what is termed as "moral autonomy". As a conclusion, every engineer should know the code of ethics regulated by the society he/she belongs to, for it ensures that he/she adheres to the highest standards of professionalism. [1], [2]

Question 2:

Give an example of a conflict of interest and discuss.

Answer 2:

Simply put, a conflict of interest is a situation that arises when the aims of two different parties are incompatible. An example of a conflict of interest is when an employee using his/her company's product/service formula for personal gain by producing similar goods that compete with those of his/her company. This is clearly a conflict of interest as both parties (the employee and the company) have contrasting interests, for the employee will benefit from selling the similar services/products be it directly through him/her or indirectly through his/her company (such as bonuses,
