On top of the selected homework questions, you can use the remaining questions as an extra study resource to help you learn.

1 Marketing is often portrayed as a creative enterprise. Why would a marketing executive need to have an understanding of the capital budgeting process and techniques such as net present value and internal rate of return? (LO 5.1)

- Capital budgeting refers to the investment decision process carried out by a firm.
- Within the constraints of the objectives and policies, management will consider a range of investment opportunities, that is, projects that the firm will consider proceeding with as part of its business operations.
- Projects need to maximise shareholder value, so quantitative measures, such as NPV and IRR, can be used to evaluate project opportunities and choices.
- Marketing campaigns are simply another type of project that the firm will analyse using these techniques. As such, the marketing executive may need to explain how the proposed campaign will create market value. Also, if challenged about the potential for the marketing campaign to create value, the marketing executive will need to understand the arguments (by being familiar with capital budgeting techniques).

2 Disney Corporation is considering the re-release of its classic film library. The project will involve an investment of $78 000 000 and will produce a positive cash flow of $25 000 000 in the first year. The cash flows will increase by 10 per cent each year thereafter for another five years (i.e. the project runs for six years). At that stage the project will cease. The company expects a rate of return of 17 per cent on this type of project. (LO 5.1)

a. Calculate the NPV and the IRR.
