

CUSTOMARY WATER LAWS AND PRACTICES: GHANA

G. A Sarpong

INTRODUCTION

Ghana has the distinction of being the first British colony south of the Sahara to have attained independence from colonial rule in 1957. The country has had a rather chequered political history largely dominated by military rule. Since 1993, however, Ghana has been governed on democratic lines on the basis of the 1992 Constitution, which has been fashioned along American lines.

The country, with an area of 92,100square miles and a population of about 18 million, is situated on the Gulf of Guinea, West Africa; and has accordingly a generally hot and humid climate in the south and hot dry climate in the northern parts. Ghana's neighbours are all francophone: La Cote D'Ivoire to the west, Togo to the east, and Burkina Faso to the north.

Ghana is fairly well endowed with water resources. The mean annual rainfall ranges from 2150 mm in the extreme southwest to 800 mm in the southeast and about 1000 mm in the Northeast. The country is drained by three main river basin systems: the Volta, South western and Coastal, covering in that order 70 %, 22 % and 8 % of the total area of the country. These systems are shared with Ghana's neighbours; the Volta in particular, with Cote D'Ivoire, Burkina Faso, Togo, Benin and Mali.

The total annual run-off of the basins is estimated as 56.4 billion m³ out of which 38.7 billion m³ originate from Ghana. Of this, the Volta River accounts for 68 % of the run off.¹ The water resources of Ghana, synonymous to a large extent with the Volta River, and their associated industries dominate a large part of the economic life of the country².

Ghana is also endowed with ground and marine water resources. The ground water resources of the country are found in two rock formations; the sedimentary and non sedimentary. The sedimentary formation mainly of Voltaian origin occupies about 43 % of the total area of the country with yields of 1.0-12.0 m³/h at depths of 20-80 metres. The non-sedimentary formation mainly comprises the crystalline basement complex of pre-Cambrian origin and occupies 57 % of the total area of the country with yields of 1.5-32.0 m³/h at depths of 20-100 metres. The quality of groundwater resources in Ghana is generally good except in few instances of localized pollution.³

Ghana ratified the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS) in 1985. Pursuant to the ratification of UNCLOS, Ghana enacted the Maritime Zones Delimitation Law, 1986 to give force and effect to UNCLOS. Under the law, Ghana declared a 200-mile Exclusive Economic Zone (EEZ) for purposes of exploration, exploitation, conservation and management of the resources in the EEZ.
